

Once upon a time, in 300 BC, there was a massive global war that impacted so many people's lives. Their homes were destroyed, and they lost their families and loved ones. The war took a toll on most of the world, which caused a lot of sadness. With no solution to prevent the loss of so many people, Sir Francis Jacobs, the leader of England, decided that he wanted to make a tennis tournament where the top most populated countries would be allowed to gather their best tennis players and send them to a tennis academy to train for the tournament. There would then be a mini-tournament in each country where the top 4 players who have then have to play with each other to see which person gets to advance to represent their country in the tournament. The majority of people start training at a very young age. But the people who aren't really good at tennis or who don't play tennis focus on having as many kids as possible to increase the population and to make their kids compete in their competition. The country that wins gets to control everyone in the world for 10 months. The tournament occurs every 4 years.

A couple of thousand years later the tournament has been in great shape. The number one country four years ago was Spain. They had the number one tennis player in the World, Rafael Nadal X., who won this competition three times. His parents made him play tennis and he was a natural at three years old, but he hated it. He won the competition for the first time at seven years old and the only reason that he was doing well was due to the pressure from his family. The second-best player in the world is Carlos Alcaraz from Brazil. Carlos's family has been putting a lot of pressure on him, but he still loves the game. He has become one of the best tennis players in the world at 15 years old during the last tournament when he made it to the finals against Rafael Nadal X. France's number one tennis player was Gael Monfils, who loved the sport from a young age. He always had the vision to go professional but since this tournament is coming up, he stepped up and is playing for his country in the semi-finals. He believes that he can defeat everyone from every country and can win. The final player in the semi-final of the tournament is Rohan Kapoor from India. He has been playing this sport at such a young age and has been preparing for this tournament all of his life. This is his first time playing in the tournament. He believes that with all of the tools that he has been given he can be the one who can win the tournament. The top four had already beaten 32 players from different countries to reach the semis. Everyone wants India to win because it is their first time competing in the tournament and the fans want to see an upset for Spain.

The country that won four years ago was Spain, continuing their winning streak for the third time. Spain got to have control of other countries many times, which made the other one hundred twenty-seven countries angry. They increased taxes by 20 percent, made gas around $20 per gallon, and made a lot of changes that affected the economy of every country. Countries were suffering from inflation and financial depression, which made people stay in their homes and prevented them from traveling due to how expensive everything was. Other countries wanted to send their players to the best tennis academies so that they didn't have to see Spain win again. Due to the expenses, it made it hard for other countries to send their tennis players to academies, creating an unfair advantage for Spain. During the nine to ten months that Spain was in power, the people in Spain had a very sustainable life. The tournament takes place in a private area in the

How the tournament has changed over the years

More about the competition - Where it takes place, What countries qualified for the tournament

Things that happen during the tournament

Who wins next

How the tournament is changed so people don't suffer as much