1. This source is a youtube video of behind-the-scenes filming of a wedding. I chose this source because it provided myself with insight on shooting a wedding. In the video, you could see the videographers setting up drones, cameras, shots, etc. You can see the videographer communicating with the Dj, the bride and groom, and others. I found this source useful because I never have seen the behind the scenes of a wedding video shoot. I am able to take notes on the arrangement on how what they do from the beginning to the end. One limitation is that the setting is different and my production is not as high quality as theirs.

2. This source is a blog post that talks about tips on wedding videography. I chose this source because it has helped me in preparation for filming a wedding. The points of the blog talk about how important communication is, to have a shot list and your “must have” shots, be prepared for the lighting conditions, get b-roll, etc. I found this very useful to better prepare myself when doing this for the first time. I have gained an understanding of the story you want to tell for a wedding film as suppose to a movie. A drawback of the source is that it didn’t really get into the specifics/in-depth.

3. This source is a youtube video that shares the mindset and social tips for filming a wedding. As I am taking on this project by myself, I learned his tips through his experiences as a solo wedding videographer. He provides simple tips such as pre-production (building a timeline and strategizing), to not overthink it, to stay minimal, to keep communicating, asking for help, having fun, etc. I found this source useful after filming because I was able to relate to the simple tips that was given. I realized how stressful filming a wedding could be. A setback of this source was that it didn’t really go over techniques.

4. This is source is a youtube video explaining the settings and gear tips to shooting a wedding video. He explains the settings you want to be able to control when filming. He goes over what frame rate, shutter speed, and aperture to use. This source has better prepared me with using the camera for filming. I found it very helpful to gain tips on the different settings to use for wedding videography. A drawback of this source is that it doesn’t really show any examples of the different settings.

5. I chose this source because the wedding I am going to film will also be a church wedding ceremony. The video goes over the gear, audio, camera movement, etc. I have found this to be useful and relatable since the wedding takes place at a church. I have learned what to include in your wedding video and to make the best use of what you have in the space you are in. I chose to include this video because I wanted something more specific to the area I am capturing my wedding video. The limitations of this source are that, it doesn't really specify on what you want to include in your video.

6,7. These sources are wedding videos I found on youtube. I chose these sources because it has given me inspiration on ways to film at a church. These sources are useful because I can use them as examples of how I want my wedding video to be arranged and what I should include. The first link is a wedding video made during the covid pandemic. The rhythm of the video is particularly very interesting because it goes from upbeat to slow then upbeat again. The second video is more of an example of a church wedding video. There aren't really any limitations to these sources.

8. This source is a guide to shooting hand-held videos for weddings. I chose this source because I am going to be filming hand-held. This video has taught me how to physically be still and less shaky. He says to hold your camera close, let the movement come from the hips, keep your elbows tucked, etc. My position and how I hold the camera will affect the motion of the shot. I find this useful because it will get tiring to film for one-plus hours straight. I need to save my energy throughout the whole wedding. I believe this source didn't really have any limitations. It instead gave us tips to overcome our limits in hand-held filmmaking.

9. This source is a blog that provides 7 editing tips to increase your wedding video. I chose this source because I am unfamiliar with/don't know how to do these edits such as Eye-trace, Motion Cuts, Keyframing, Frame blocking, etc. I believe that this source is useful and can be applied to my editing process. We use different transitions between scenes so are video is smooth.

10. This source is a video on the editing process for making a wedding video. It shows the step by step on what you should do from start to finish; such as selecting music, importing footage, build a story, make a hook, adjustment layers, etc. I found this source helpful because it is very detailed on what you should include in building your wedding video. With this source, I have a layout on what my editing process is going to look like. The limitations of this source is that he doesn't really show the arrangement of his footage as an example.
