The Office

The Office is by far the most important recourse used to make our show. In order to start the production of the television series, we rewatched plenty of episodes because we are going for the same style as The Office, from the interviews to the camera angles to the camera movements. The Office was the base point for pretty much all documentary style sitcoms and it is a crucial resource to make our show. The style of comedy is a basis for any show and I guarantee that it is what helped inspire and create the sitcoms that came after it.

The Real Bros of Simi Valley is a short youtube series that I absolutely adore. This show inspired me to make my own. It is one of the greatest comedies in my opinion. The jokes are so funny and the characters are very unique. It follows a group of 5 dudes from simi valley in California and each character is making a mockery of the people that are actually living there in real life. Adrian and I will use that style to make our show about people from south philly. The characters' outfits and accents will match as well as the way they act around each other.

This video on Youtube is helping me see what it's like to work on set. I got to see how the directors were involved with the actors which we will both use to help us when we eventually direct the show. You can see what everyone's role is in preproduction from directors, cast, and cameras. This source in specific, helped me realize that as the director, I will have to coach the cast to get the type of character personality I want and I will have to give them examples.

Jersey shore tv show

The Jersey Shore reality tv show is what simi valley was inspired by. The type of predicaments and conflicts that the characters have with each other are very similar in both of the shows. I also like how they incorporated music and sound effects in certain moments to make scenes more dramatic. The structure of the show is very well organized and they set it up so that the final episode of the season is the most impactful. Every episode leads up to the final one where everything goes down.
